Last Week before Finals

You’re almost there!... You can see the finish line! The semester is quickly drawing to a close and probably the last thing you have left to do before you can go home for the holidays are your final exams. These finals can either make you or break your final grades in your courses. So to state the obvious, this is not the time to begin slacking and get the end of the semester ‘itis. These next two weeks will be hard and stressful, but if you appropriately manage your time it will be a lot less difficult than you imagined. So my advice to you to all of you this week is to go to the library and begin studying for your finals NOW! Don’t waste your time procrastinating this week because it will lead to stressful all-nighters next week; and the last thing you want during finals week is to be sleep deprived. The library starts staying open for 24/7 starting this week, so there will be plenty of time and opportunities for you to get the work you need to do done.

Good luck to all of you on your exams. I know all of you have the ability to do great on them!!!

My Best,
Scott Lundgren
Graduate Assistant for First Year Experiences