Teacher Portals: Impacts of Teacher Preparation on Student Test Scores in North Carolina

Perry reviewed information from UNC Chapel Hill on Teacher Portals, which reports data related to the portals (entry paths) into teacher education. The study looks at a UNC undergraduate versus someone who took a different career path into the teaching professions. The information is based on 2007 data. Most of the high school teachers are lateral entry. Middle school teachers show a similar pattern. Teach America numbers total less than 90 due to selectivity. Graduates of Teach America and Teaching Fellows programs record high impact on student test results. The study was based over five years. It is believed that the effect of teacher preparation is overridden by the effect of the school system beyond a five year time frame.

This information may be useful in evaluating CEAP programs next year. The UNC system will use this data in making programmatic changes.

Perry distributed an article to the council from the Charlotte observer which discussed teacher preparation.
Business Items

_Draft Field Placement Policy Guidelines*

Gwendoline thanked council members for their feedback and assistance with the current draft policy for field placements. Gwendoline reviewed the draft policy guidelines with the council. They discussed the placement process, orientation for cooperating teachers, university supervisors and interns, and the specific language of the proposal. Gwendoline will update the draft policy with the feedback and then she will bring the draft policy to the Professional Ed Council (PEC) for review. Following a review and opportunity for feedback by the PEC, Gwendoline will bring the policy back to Leadership Council for additional discussion and approval.
