On Going Research

Academic Dishonesty: Papers, Theses, & Higher Education:

We are currently investigating the potential for success of a contract cheating company writing a graduate level thesis. The thesis was presented for review to an actual thesis committee. The committee members were blinded to the fact that the thesis was written by a contract cheating company and not by the graduate student who submitted the thesis and attempted the oral defense.

Contract Cheating: A Qualitative Process Review

This study is a qualitative exploration into the feasibility of purchasing basic (e.g., 5 to 10 page) term papers from three different online contract cheating companies / paper mills. We have documented the process of identifying and selecting three online companies to write term papers. We submitted the papers to three psychology faculty members to determine the quality of the product. The faculty members were blind to the origins of the paper until after the papers were graded. The faculty members were also asked to share any additional thoughts they may have regarding the paper after being informed that it was a purchased product.

Cheating, Personality and the Honor Pledge:

This project received support from a WCU Provost Internal Support Grant.

Most of the research that has been conducted on cheating is retrospective in nature. That is, researchers ask participants if they have cheated in the past. Very few studies assess the nature and extent that one cheats in a controlled laboratory setting when he or she is unaware that his or her behavior is being recorded. This study examines interpersonal and intrapersonal variables on actual cheating behavior. All participants will complete the M5-120, a well validated personality inventory. This is done to assess personality's relationship to cheating behavior. In addition, participants are placed randomly in control conditions with varying degrees of review of an honor code statement (e.g., no review, silent review by participant, review collectively with the researcher) before they complete an anagram and logic problem exercise. Participants are also randomly placed in one of four control conditions designed to assess the influence of others on their behavior. These groups are: 1. Participant alone, 2. Participants in a room with two confederates who are not communicating with one another, 3. Participant in a room with two confederates who have a conversation supportive of cheating on the anagram and logic problem exercise and then cheat on the exercise, and 4. Participants in a room with two confederates who have a conversation opposed to cheating and then do not cheat on the exercise. Participants are also informed that they will be given gift cards with varying monetary values depending on their performance on the anagram and logic problem exercise (better performance would equate to higher value gift cards).

Frequency and Nature of Cheating Behaviors at a Midsize Public University in the Southeastern United States.

We have developed an Academic Integrity Survey that will be administered to students and faculty at a midsize public university. This project is being conducted in collaboration with the University's Academic Integrity Task Force.
